A report is an informative formal piece of writing. It concerns a particular person, place, situation, plan, etc. It is addressed to one's superior/ colleagues, members of a committee, etc. It is written in response to a request or instruction.

Types of reports

- Assessment reports – present and evaluate the positive and/or negative features of a person, place, plan, etc. They also include your opinion and/or recommendation.

- Informative reports present information concerning a meeting that has taken place, progress made on a project, etc.

- Survey reports present and analyse information gathered from door-to-door surveys/questionnaires, including conclusions drawn from this information and suggestions or recommendations.

- Proposal reports present plans, decisions or suggestions concerning possible future courses of action for approval by one's superior at work, a bank manager, members of a committee, etc.

a) an introductory paragraph which clearly states the purpose and content of the report;
b) a main body in which the relevant information is presented in detail under suitable subheadings; and
c) a conclusion which summarises the information given, and may include an opinion and/or suggestion/recommendation.

Note that before you start writing your report you should give information indicating who the report is written to (name/position/company, etc), who the report is written by (name/position), the subject of the report, and the date:

Introduction

Purpose clearly defined purpose and content of the report.

To begin report

As requested, this report is an assessment of the suitability of Jett Lee for promotion to group coordinator. The report summarises his personal qualities, leadership abilities and work-related achievements, on the basis of which her suitability depends.

Main body

Personal Qualities → sub-headings

Jett is a very enthusiastic member of staff who is always pleasant and considerate and whose punctuality record is commendable. His reliable and helpful attitude is admired and respected by her colleagues. In addition, he has a wonderful rapport with children. Despite the fact that he has a tendency towards timidity, this does not seem to have affected the quality of his work.

Leadership Abilities

Although Jett has only been employed here for a short time he has already demonstrated good leadership qualities. In spite of his shyness, he has nonetheless shown that he possesses the ability to assert himself over his group in a constructive way whenever the need arises. His organisational skills are outstanding. Furthermore, he is able to work in a calm and methodical manner to achieve the desired results quickly and efficiently, even under pressure.

Achievements

use complex sentences

Over the course of this summer, Jett has voluntarily taken on many extra responsibilities involving the planning and organisation of new entertainment. For instance, he recently helped to plan a series of new activities which proved extremely successful and also very popular with the children. Moreover, many of his innovative ideas have been added to our existing programme, thus providing group leaders and camp guests with a much wider variety of activity options to choose from.

Recommendation → conclusion

In conclusion, I strongly recommend that Jett should be promoted to the position of group coordinator. I feel he is an excellent candidate for the job and would be a valuable addition to the team.

Survey report*

EASY ENGLISH 444

To: Chris Evans, Marketing Director, Joy Cosmetics Ltd
From: Julia Roberts, Kray Consumer Research
Subject: Consumer Survey: "Healthy Shine" Products
Date: 20th June 2019

Purpose → Introduction

The aim of this report is to present the findings of a survey carried out to determine consumer awareness and opinions of the "Healthy Shine" range of skin-care products. The data included in this report was obtained from a random sample of 1,500 men and women, aged 18-45, who responded to a questionnaire survey on 15th and 16th May.

→ content of the report

→ To begin report

survey dates

Main body

Consumer Awareness of Product Range → subheadings

Of the 1,500 respondents surveyed, forty per cent reported that they know of one or more of the products advertised on television or in magazines and twenty-five per cent had seen the products displayed in stores. The remaining ten per cent of those surveyed were unaware of the product range. The fact that consumer awareness is less than a half suggests that television and magazine advertising has failed to attract the desired level of consumer attention.

Packaging

A large number of those aware of the products were of the opinion that the packaging is unattractive. This is highlighted by the fact that fifty-eight per cent (almost 3 out of 5 customers) stated that they had not sampled the product line, preferring instead to purchase competitors' products with more attractive packaging.

→ what seems to be the problem..

Quality and Price

Of the forty-two per cent of consumers who had sampled at least one product in the range, only fifteen per cent reported that they had not repurchased the product or purchased other products in the range. This indicates that eighty-five per cent of the consumers are satisfied with quality and price.

↳ positive response

conclusion

Conclusion

On the basis of the findings above, it would seem that although the quality and retail prices of "Healthy Shine" products are competitive, a large percentage of consumers are not aware of the product range. Furthermore, many of those who are aware of the range do not find the packaging sufficiently attractive to induce them to purchase any of the products. Our recommendation, therefore, is that your company launch a new advertising campaign to increase consumer awareness, in addition to altering the packaging of the entire range so as to make the products more appealing to consumers.

Auditions were held on 10th May to select local performers. In addition, two professional groups have agreed to appear in the concert free of charge. To: Mr John Cena, Chairman, Brock Town Council

Subject: Request to rent the Globe Theatre
Date: 20th June 2019

Purpose → Introduction

→ To begin report

As requested, I submit a formal proposal concerning the possible use of the Globe Theatre building by the ABC Drama Company. This proposal outlines the company's plans and intentions, and our reasons for wanting to rent the building. → content of the report

Need for Theatre → subheadings

Since the Globe Theatre closed five years ago, Brock lacked a suitable venue for drama productions. We intend to make the theatre available to theatrical groups in the area, of which there are a great number and variety, in addition to staging performances produced by our company.

reason

Renovation of the Building

If our request is granted, we do not propose to alter the exterior in any way other than to repair and paint it. The interior, on the other hand, would benefit from extensive renovation. We also plan to install additional seating and create a further exit in order to comply with recently introduced safety regulations.

proposed ideas

Proposed Programme

Should the ABC re-open the Globe Theatre, the programme would include productions by a range of companies. As well as the ABC's usual choice of light classics or comedy, performance of many different types would be staged by those groups which expressed keen interest in our venture.

Profits and Payment

→ Expectation

We expect the theatre to make a profit within the first year. Since the Arts Council agreed to give our group a sizeable grant, subject to our finding suitable premises, sufficient funds are available to cover running costs and pay a monthly rent.

Conclusion

→ To end report

In conclusion, we believe that our proposed plans for renting the Globe Theatre would bring a number of benefits to Brock. Not only would the building be restored and improved, but the regularity and variety of performances would delight the theatre-going public and make a valuable contribution to the cultural life of the town.

To: Jon Snow, Managing Director, GOT Ltd
From: Edward Cullen, Marketing Manager
Subject: Declining Sales of Air Coolers
Date: 20th June 2019

EASY ENGLISH 444

Purpose

This report intends to present the reasons behind the declining sales of company's Air Coolers. A four member committee was formed according to the resolution passed by board meeting held on 15th April 2019 to study the decreasing cooler sales and to suggest the measures for promotion of their sales.

Methodology

1. We got the questionnaires filled by the different segments of customers.
2. Personal interviews of customers were conducted.
3. Detailed discussion with dealers, distributors and retailers.
4. Sales record of Air Coolers of last five years was studied.

Findings

1. The studies reveal that because of global warming and a lot of increase in the temperature, the coolers do not remain effective in months of June, July and August when humidity increases.
2. The young generation thinks that coolers are outdated.
3. Air conditions have replaced coolers.
4. No doubt Air conditioners are more expensive as compared to coolers but they are easily available on instalments with less interest rates or sometimes at zero interest rates during offer periods.
5. The big names like Hitachi, Samsung, LG etc. in air conditioning business spend a lot on advertisements which persuade the viewers to buy product to get relief from scorching heat.

Recommendations

1. Some new and innovative features should be added to coolers to increase their sales.
2. Arrangements should be made for buying coolers also at easy instalments.
3. More should be spent on advertisements and sales promotional schemes in order to attract the customers.
4. Right segment of the market (lower middle class and middle class) should be targeted.

should acquire visual capability to react to the graphic symbols (Field, 1997). In many situations, reading is considered to be the indispensable channel of communication in an ever widening world. Reading is a part of the way we use language in daily life in order to communicate with each other.

- Definition of Reading

There are many definitions of reading, which have been stated by many experts in this field. The definition and meaning of reading itself depend on the purpose of the reader, the text and textual content, the attitude of the readers toward the text, the reading materials, and the experience of the reader. Harmer (1998) defines reading as an exercise dominated by the eyes and the brain. Nunan (2003) defines that reading as a fluent process of readers considering information represented in a text and their prior knowledge to get the meaning of the text. He also adds that the purpose of reading is comprehension. It means that, in the reading process, the readers not only depend on the information drawn from the text, but they also should recall their prior knowledge to fully comprehend the text. Readers read a text with a great store of prior knowledge and experience, including some assumption about the text.

- Reading Difficulties

There is a widespread case among academies in Asia that a young learner should focus on speaking and listening than reading and writing (Paul, 2003, p. 83). Learning English as a foreign language for some students is considered as a difficult thing (Westwood, 2008, p. 14).

Students who failed in reading tend to see reading as a painful experience, build their own mindset about reading as a demanding activity where readers have to read a text correctly; they see reading as a process of getting a word right rather than see it as an enjoying activity.

The factors that cause the failure in reading are the failure to understand a word or a sentence, how sentences relate to one another, how the information fits together in meaningful ways and lack of interest or concentration.

- The Sub-skills and Techniques of Reading

Reading is a receptive skill. Readers or students can be claimed successful where they are like expert in all most of some sub-skills, and apply it to get a good comprehension when reading a text. According to Brown (2001), he stated that "technique is any of a wide variety of exercises, activity, or devices used in the language classroom for realizing lesson objectives". There are many techniques or strategies that can be used in reading. In this research, the researcher decided to choose five of techniques in reading (Skimming, Scanning, Previewing and Predicting, Making Inference and Summarizing) based on the theory from Mikulecky and Jeffries (2004) to get an efficient and effective reading comprehension for readers/students for basic need in academic reading.

The reason why researchers choose those techniques is due to the need of this study, which analyzes the students' reading techniques difficulties in recount text. The respondents which are the third semester of college students also became the consideration because the five techniques are in accordance with what they need in academic reading.

- Skimming

Skimming is one of the tools that can be use to read efficiently. Skimming refers to looking only for the general or main ideas, and works best with non-fiction (or factual) material. With skimming, the overall understanding is reduced because the reader does not read everything. The reader reads only what is important for the purpose. Skimming takes place while reading and allows the reader to look for details in addition to the main ideas.

It also means reading the text quickly to get general meaning. This requires speed reading skill. The benefit of this technique is that it can allow you to familiarize yourself with a text. It is useful for reading passage in comprehension test, for answering cloze passages that test grammatical knowledge, or for reading academic articles or textbook chapters. This technique is not appropriate to use for reading a whole book. According to Mikulecky and Jeffries (2004), skimming is high-speed reading that can you save time and help you get through lots of material quickly. It is different from other kinds of high-speed reading, such as previewing and scanning. Skimming is "glancing rapidly through a text to determine its gist, for example in order to decide whether a research paper is relevant to our own work or to keep ourselves superficially informed about matters that are not of great importance to us." 'Gist' is a major point of information of a text. This statement is also supported by Grellet (1996) who state that skimming is the reading for getting the gist (main point or general meaning) of a text. Various reading schemes recommend as a starting process because by starting with skimming

CamScanner

Summary writing is also one of the important academic skills for students to show their reading comprehension. It can be said that if students can summarize well, exactly, they improve their reading ability (Budi, 2009; Palmer, 2003). It is a valuable practice for students in developing reading and writing skills, also it is related to paraphrasing (Sotiriou, 2002). Many researchers have found that summarization process connected with reading and writing. Corbeil (2000) pointed out that "the summarization process in second language becomes a valuable assessment tool to conduct students' progress towards the acquisition of second language reading comprehension skills". Also, cultivating students' writing skill through reading is important (Liu, 2008). Palmer (2003) stated that summarizing is based on a learning process, and the perfect comprehension of a text will be a necessary step in order to teach students to condense information in a new piece of discourse.

It can be concluded that summarizing is a technique in reading to retelling the stories or passage in a short version by sorting the information and paraphrasing the ideas.

- Definition of Recount

A recount is a text that tells about past experience or events that can be based on the author's personal or historical events. This type of text is chosen as means in which the students write. It is selected since they can feel free to explore the story that is based on their personal experience and eventually convert their ideas into written form.

The purpose of a Recount is to inform and entertain the readers. To attain its purpose, the text needs to involve several steps namely, an orientation which lets the reader know who is involved, where, when and others and the retelling of a series of events in chronological sequence (Derewianka, 1990). A piece of text that retells past events, usually in the order in which they happened is a recount text It begins with by telling the reader who was involved, what happened, where the events took place and when it happened (Derewianka, 1990)

Methodology

This study used a descriptive-qualitative method, embracing the characteristics of a case study approach. The focal point of this study was on the response of reading comprehension test answered by sixth semester college students in a state university in Bandung. The method was used to discover the some information about a text. This technique involves using the title of a text, the table of contents, the index, the appendix, the preface of the author of publisher, headings or subtitles of chapters and paragraphs, information on the back cover, acknowledgement, and so on. It is common for students to dive into an academic text and begin reading in a hurry, which is often counterproductive. When reading for academic purposes, it is preferable to read with certain goals in mind.

- Making Inference

Inferring—making inferences—is often described as making a logical guess or "reading between the lines." Making an inference is a lot like the chemical process of forming a chemical compound—when two elements combine and form a new substance. Readers make inferences when they are able to take their own experiences and combine them with information they gather from what they read. The result is that they create new meaning or draw a conclusion that isn't explicitly stated in the reading (Zwiers, 2005).

Mikulecky and Jeffries (2004) states that good readers constantly make inferences as they read. That means they think like a detective and look for clues in the text. Then they use these clues to guess about the text and about the writer's ideas. This is especially important when some ideas are not directly stated.

For students, it can be difficult to understand a text because it contains few linking words and few signpost expressions. In such situations we have to make use of two kinds of information to make sense of what we read. The first information is from the text, i.e. clues from the words, sentences and ideas which make up the text. The second information is provided by the readers, i.e. clues from outside the text, from our own knowledge of the world.

- Summarizing

According to Mikulecky and Jeffries (2004), summarizing is the process of retelling the important parts of a passage in a much shorter form. Summarizing is also a good study skill, he states that "Often you must read, understand, and remember information from several textbook chapters. When you write summaries of your reading, the summaries can help you review for examinations". Summarizing is a strategy in which readers sort through the information presented in a text in order to pull out and paraphrase the essential ideas. It requires readers to determine what is important, to condense this information, and to state it in their own words (Harvey & Goudvis, 2007).

CamScanner

the reader will have a framework to accommodate the whole text because it is a quick process of reading.

Many people think that skimming is a haphazard process placing the eyes where ever they fall. However, to skim effective, there has to be a structure, but the reader does not read everything. There are a several ways to do skimming; skimming to get an overall impression, skimming a text using first line of paragraphs, skimming a text using a first and last paragraph and skimming a text using a section heading.

- Scanning

Scanning means reading slowly and carefully and picking out certain key words or phrases. It allows you to pick out specific information from a text. It does not mean reading word by word, it just means reading carefully. For scanning to be successful, it is needed to understand how the material is structured as well as comprehend what is read so the reader can locate the specific information they need. Scanning also allows to find details and other information in a hurry. To do scanning there are few ways to do it; establishing the purpose, locating the appropriate material, and knowing how the information is structured before start scanning is essential.

The scanned material is typically arranged in the following ways: alphabetically, chronologically, non-alphabetically, by category, or textually. Alphabetical information is arranged in order from A to Z, while chronological information is arranged in time or numerical order. Information can be also be arranged in non- alphabetical order, such as a television listing, or by category, listings of like items such as an auto parts catalog. Sometimes information is located within the written paragraphs of text, also known as a textual sense, as in an encyclopedia entry.

The benefit of this technique is most useful for picking out the key learning points when ready for learning. Mikulecky and Jeffries (2004, p. 25), states that "scanning is very high-information. When you scan, you have a question in mind. You do not read every word, only key words that will answer your question". In addition Brown (2001) states that scanning is quickly searching for some particular piece or pieces of information in a text or passage. Based on this definition, scanning has a purpose to extract some specific information without reading through the whole text. It is also makes the time efficiently. There are a variety of texts suitable for scanning; indexes, dictionaries, maps,

CamScanner

Third is the length; the length of the text is enough and appropriate for sixth semester students. Each text has approximately 1200 words or longer texts. A common argument in favor of the use of longer text in, such for testing for academic purposes is that this practice reflects more closely the situation where students have to read and study long texts.

Fourth is the language features and the structure. There are some generalization of recount's language features, such as proper nouns that inform the participants who involved in, the use of past tense to retells the events, the use of action verbs (went, saw, played, studied, etc.), the frequent use words which link events in time (next, later, when, then, after, before, first, at the same time, as soon as she left, late on Friday, and others), and personal comments about the event (Derewianka, 1990).

The text also contains the generic structure of recount text, which has the three stages. The first stage is orientation which provides information about the setting and situation of the participants. The second stage is record of events (series of events) which tells about sequence of events or what happened to these participants from the beginning to the end of the event. The last stage is re-orientation which brings the listener or reader back into the present (Emilia, 2010). This re-orentation stage is an optional element that can be added on the recount text.

The reading test indicates that the most difficult reading techniques encountered by college students is making inference. It is shows through the scores of students which mostly get a lower score. It is also supported by the result of interview, which students agree that making inference technique is the most difficult technique among the other techniques.

Conclusions

This study investigated students' reading techniques difficulties in reading a recount text. This study has clarified the findings from previous studies focused on the effectiveness of reading techniques and strategies in reading comprehension through certain techniques and certain texts (see for example Kispal, 2008; Kerr, 2009).

The result of the study indicates that the students master almost all five techniques tested in this study. However, the result of the study shows that making inference becomes the most difficult reading technique for the students. Based on the findings of this study, making inference is considered as the most difficult category for the students, because the expected responses to these questions are stated implicitly in the text. Generally, this result is dominated by lower achiever students. It indicates that 53% of the students need more guidance in practicing making inference skill in reading, because good readers constantly make inferences as they read (Mikulecky & Jeffries, 2004). Thus, they create new meaning or draw a conclusion that is not explicitly stated in the reading (Zwiers, 2005).

The implication of the result of the study is that the teacher should provide an accurate and clear understanding about reading technique and also provide appropriate exercises for each technique.

In contrast, the technique that students master in recount text is scanning; 100% students achieved a perfect score. It is influenced by the expected response for this question was stated clearly in the text. Furthermore, for the other reading techniques, students seem to master each technique. Students only need more guidance in reading and practice in answering the similar question. The finding indicates that students difficult in making inference.
